For reference on your call with Ken from the New Yorker -

Any questions he asks you about:

- specific DoD programs (we've responded to these only that the applications could be powerful and we are very driven to be able to make any contribution we can in that regard)

- how our technology works (ie that there is a single device that does all tests), or

- future plans/things that are not done yet and thus are not in the public domain or on the internet and we've accordingly not announced yet you can let him know we don't talk about these on the record, as was the case with Fortune (and always). I've already told him this and he shouldn't go into this line of questioning with you, but just in case.

I hope your trip is going well -

Elizabeth
