Thanks for this note – you know where to find us if there are any other areas like this where we can provide additional info/data,

Elizabeth

Again, thanks so much for going to the trouble of sending me all these validation studies They're remarkable on their face on they really increase my comfort level as a reporter, in terms of doing my due diligence. Thanks again.

Thanks for this Roger – let us know if there is not easy access to the documents in the AM and we will triage in real-time. We'll be following with additional content in parallel,

Elizabeth

Christian and Elizabeth--

Thank you for all your time and trouble on this! I was able to download all the password-protected documents; although I am not yet able to open them, I think that's because of anomalies relating to the way my home computer remotely links to Fortune's own double-password protected outlook mailbox, and I am optimistic when I try to access your documents from work tomorrow it will probably work fine, or I'll be able to get help from a tech person who will be able to open them. I'll let you know.

Thanks also, Elizabeth, for all the interesting responses to my earlier questions, including the surprising answers re Vitamin D!!

Best,

Roger

Roger,

Attached is the final portion per my note below. Apologies for flooding your inbox here, but hopefully this is able to reach you successfully.

Best regards,

Christian

Roger,

It appears the first file I sent was too large to go through. I have split that first file, which contains the first 100 slides, into two smaller files. Please see attached.

Thanks

Christian

Roger,

I hope this finds you well. Attached to this email is a presentation deck with detailed clinical background. We have further consolidated and encrypted the file to get this to go through to you. Please note that due to the size, I have split the file into three PDFs, which will be sent in separate emails.

All documents can be accessed with the following credentials:

USERNAME: rparloff

PASSWORD: theranosconfidential

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Best regards,

Christian
