Hi. I got word that you up in the northwest were wondering (1) what happened to me and (2) whether I was going to return to doing talks.

The answer to #2 is that I have just returned to doing talks.

The answer to #1 is complex. My office manager "allegedly" confessed to embezzling $15,000 but the amount may be closer to $50,000. In my absence he would see patients as if he were me and write controlled substance prescriptions, even changing doses or starting other medications (he started someone on Fentora, for example). Although evidence is still building, he has been accused by some patients of supplying known drug dealers with prescriptions to sell on the street, apparently by sending "emergency" schedule 2 prescriptions by fax to various pharmacies and then having a dealer pick up the medications. Of that last accusation, I am not sure of the evidence since it is coming in, so I think that I should say patients have "alleged" that he has supplied street drug vendors. In any case, he nearly bankrupted me and his forcing patients to pay cash despite their insurance coverage has resulted in insurance fraud, medical board and soon to be, IRS investigations of me. Fortunately, all concerned have understood the problem and so far I am okay. And, thankfully, nobody was hurt by the prescriptions he wrote.
